Mixed-Use Neighborhoods

Communities where you can walk to school, stores, restaurants, parks and grocery stores are more desirable and healthier because they promote physical activity and economic vitality.

Emiko Atherton is the director of the National Complete Streets Coalition at Smart Growth America. She uses her expertise in transportation policy, public health, land use, economic development and legislation to consult with communities nationwide on how to create better communities. Atherton served as chief of staff for a King County councilmember in Washington state.
